The BMW CAS 2 and 3 software is 100% compatible with all other CAS 2 and 3 hardware that are on the market and is also compatible with all vehicles manufactured between 1992 and 2010 fitted with CAS 2 and 3 modules. It is important to point out that all the remotes that come with the 3rd Generation CAS modules are not compatible. If you want to learn more about CAS 2 or 3 hardware, please refer to the below links. CAS 2 and 3 hardware has been around since the mid 1990s, and has been used for a number of reasons. The first being for vehicles that use a keyless entry system but don't use a key like the US 2001 and later. For example in Canada, but due to the 2-way key system, the key has a unique ID built into it, and that ID was stored in the vehicle. Therefore, by using a CAS 2 module, with 2-way key entry, it was possible to lock or unlock the doors with the push of a button. From a BMW point of view, there are 2 types of CAS 2 or 3. The first is the Gen 2 or 1st generation CAS 2 or 3, and the second is the Gen 3 or 3rd generation CAS 2 or 3. CAS 2 and 3 Gen 3 hardware is the newest iteration of keyless entry. CAS 2 & 3 Gen 3 Keypad The first thing that is noticeable when looking at the 3rd generation keypad is that it is different. The Gen 3 keypad is much more compact and is an external keypad. So, for example, the mini key on the left is the lock and keypad and is to be held to unlock the door. While the mini key on the right is a button to unlock and open the door. There is no button on the right, and is no longer the button for the passenger side. As the Gen 3 keypad is now an external keypad. This enables the driver to unlock the door without actually getting out of the car, which removes the chance of being hit by an intruder. With the Gen 3 keypad, there is no need for a secondary PIN code and you will also not be able to bypass the keypad by having a 2-way key. On the 3rd generation keypad, the PIN code is not displayed on the keypad. This is to prevent a thief from just trying all the PIN codes 82157476af
